Occupancy Sensors with Advanced Adaptive Technology

A new generation of H-MOSS occupancy sensors..

- Microprocessor-based adaptive technology
- Uses adaptive technology to solve the three major problems of conventional occupancy sensors: false-ons, false-offs and the need for continuous manual adjustment.
- By automatically adjusting the time delay and sensitivity settings found in all occupancy sensors, the sensors adapt to constantly changing conditions
- Literally "fingerprint" movements, motion patterns and occupancy habits by recording them in the microprocessor's memory. The sensor's time delay then adjusts automatically to optimize performance based on the activity level of the occupant.
- The sensors automatically adjust the sensor's sensitivity setting to compensate for changes in environmental conditions
- Installation costs are lower because the time and guesswork required to manually adjust sensitivity and time delay are eliminated
